Not illustrated. 1795 Excerpt: ... shaken thro the sieve of the people: Let us try your jaws: a putrid ulcer lies hid in you ten der mouth, Which it would be hardly becoming to scratch with a plebeian beet. You are cold, when white sear has rouzd the bristles on your limbs: 115 Now, with a torch put under, your blood grows hot, and M with anger White sear, so called from the paleness of countenance that attends it. 115. Rouzd the briftles. Arista signisies an ear of corn, or the beard of corn. Sometimes, by catechresis, an hair or bristle, which are often said to stand an end when people are in a fright. 116. Now with a torch, &c. He now charges him with the disease of violent anger, the blood set on sire, as if a burning torch were applied, and eyes sparkling and flaming sire as it were.--In this situation, says he, you say and do things, that even Orestes himself, mad as he was, would fwтар were the words and actions of a person out of his senses. So that, though you may think you are well, because you sind no severish heat in your body, yet you are troubled with a sever of the mind every time you are angry. Therefore in this, as well as with regard to the diseases of covetousness, lust, luxury, and sear, which are all within you, you as much stand in need of a physician for your mind, as the poor wretch whom I have been speaking of, slood in need of a physician for his body; nor didhe act more oppositely to the dictates of found reason, by despising his physician, and rejecting his remedies for his bodily complaints, than you do, by despising the philosophers, and rejecting their precepts, which are the only remedied for the disorders of the mind.. Thus Scintillant oculi: dicisque, sacisque, quod ipse Non sani esse hominis,
