Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: ...it to passe; but Manawet dying in a short time after the shippes arrivall there, and the other observing the good order, and strong guard our people kept, studied only how to free himselfe out of our IV. x. hands, and thereupon laid the plot very orderly, and 18z9. indeed effected his purpose, although with so great hazard to himselfe and friends, that laboured his rescue, that Captayne Hobson and his whole Company imagined hee had beene slaine. And though in the recovery of his bodie they wounded the Master of our ship, and divers other of our Company, yet was not their Designe without the slaughter of some of their people, and the hurts of other, compassed, as appeared afterward. Hereupon Captaine Hobson and his Company, conceiving the end of their attempt to bee frustrate, resolved without more adoe to returne, and so those hopes, that charge and Voyage was lost also, for they brought home nothing but the newes of their evill successe of the unfortunate cause thereof, and of a Warre now new begun betweene the Inhabitants of those parts, and us. A miserable comfort for so weake meanes as were now left, to pursue the conclusion of so tedious an Enterprise. While this was a working, we found the meanes to send out Captaine John Smith from Plimmouth, in a Cap.J.Smith. xix 273 s 1607-22. Cap. Mason Governor in Newfoundland Plantation. ship, together with Master Dermer, and divers others with him, to lay the foundation of a new Plantation, and to try the fishing of that Coast, and to seeke to settle a Trade with the Natives: But such was his misfortune, as being scarce free of our owne Coast, he had his Masts shaken over-board by stormes and tempests, his ship wonderfully distressed, and in that extremitie forced to come backe againe; so as the season of the y...
