

Broken (Okapi Book 4)

Sharon had aspirations. She set out to achieve them, albeit daunting challenges. Her aspirations soon tampered reality. Sharon often believed that Africa was a hopeful abode, where many explorers for centuries realized their aspirations. She ventured into her interior in utmost quest for instant wealth. She was determined, as she should have, to reverse the circum-stances of her life. Africas famed and beckoning hospitality, blistering afternoons, fiery sunsets, and psychedelic political landscape circumstantially reared and offered her inescapable opportunities. She was soon besotted. Subsequently, she en-tangled with the powers that be. At first, it was a daring salsa dance with unique African overtones. She was ecstatic. She flaunted her assets in flounced haute couture not in the pre-ferred local reef skirts. As expected, in this uncanny place, she attracted the Tigers to her dance. However, when the judges gavel eventually came down that oak desk in a packed Atlanta Federal Courtroom she was alone and broken.
