

Quandary

We wake up each morning unaware that we have thousands of choices ahead of us. Each choice will be the the hinge upon the next choice is made. Choosing right or wrong depends a lot on culture and upbringing. Thomas has been put in a position of having very few options as far as choice is concerned. An overbearing father and brother force their choices upon him. In essence, growing up as he did, he did not have the benefit of making his own choices and suffering the consequences either positive or negative. There was a little in the way of positive learning experience. He in a miasma of quandary, unsure of his ability to even survive. His Mother is the only positive force in his life and she makes a final choice for him that will lock him into a box for years until a persistent friend ensures that he can choose his own destiny. The author is a native of Toronto and has travelled to many places in the world. He has a BA from the University of Waterloo and is an accredited teacher in both Ontario and the North West Territories. He lives alone in Pictou Nova Scotia overlooking one of the many bays on the North Shore. His hobbies are gardening and his pigeons.
