

Royally Duped (episode 1)

A thoroughly heterosexual male con artist tries to seduce a wealthy prince. Said prince, panicked by an impending marriage, tries manfully to be seduced. Description of Main Characters Abbie - a silly, attractive, girly young man who cons young women into giving him gifts and money. Readily acknowledges his silliness, has absolutely no qualms on being attractive, but refuses to consider that he may be girly. Even a little bit. Hermione - a practical young woman, Abbies sister and manager of their questionable business practices. Tries to balance out Abbies more foolish inclinations with her cool-headedness. Engages in purely no-nonsense, nonsensical sexual relations with Daniel. Erik - the second prince and wealthiest man in the kingdom. Business-minded, of a droll sense of a humor. Desperate to avoid actual marriage, particularly with the highborn women (who possess unfortunate vulture-ish tendencies) of the royal court. Daniel - the crown prince, forced by birth into what others might possibly feel to be an enviable position. Utterly unsuited to rule anything, especially himself. Rather ridiculous in his attempts to be taken seriously. Finds Hermione very attractive. Anne - the queen, mother of Daniel and Erik. Overbearing, wants to see her children happy, and makes them miserable. Vincent - a scheming literal malformed bastard, in all meanings of the word. Aspires to the throne. First surreptitiously gets Erik out of the way to the succession by indulging his marriage-panic, and then continually tries to place obstacles and troubles into the quartets lives which of course fail, as he is the villain of the story. A pathetic one, but still, a villain.
